

Have a wonderful weekend!
Andrea

[REDACTED]@msu.edu>

Date: Friday, December 6, 2024 at 2:33 PM
To: Kepsel, Andrea <akepsel@msu.edu>
Subject: Re: Politics of Food Exhibit at the Main Library

Omgg Andrea! I'm so glad you remembered me; this exhibit was so inspiring. I took pictures of the entire thing and favorite them. I received my master's in public health nutrition, so I was able to connect the dots with the information on the exhibit. I've been feeling down lately about by decisions to come here (MSU) and I felt (and still feel) so affirmed going through the exhibit. There are two books I'm very interested in "The Spirit of Soul Food" and "Beyond the Kitchen Table". Since being here my interest in nutrition has narrowed and expanded. My main goal is still redefining what it means to "eat healthy" through a culturally informed lens by contributing diverse research on culturally significant foods. But more specifically I want to concentrate on developing and implementing culturally relevant nutrition interventions to manage and prevent chronic diseases within BIPOC communities (Black, Latinx, and Caribbean populations). Do you have any book recommendations or additional resources I can explore over winter break while I am home? I would love work from POCs, I haven't found much on clinical nutrition research regarding my topic.

From: Kepsel, Andrea <akepsel@msu.edu>
Sent: Friday, December 6, 2024 1:44:06 PM
[REDACTED]
Subject: Re: Politics of Food Exhibit at the Main Library

Hi [REDACTED],

Yes, the exhibit is on the 3rd floor of the West tower of the Main Library. It is split along three cases along the wall by the restrooms, directly across from the instruction room and Turfgrass Information Center. The cases are inset in the wall so you may have walked past it without realizing it.

Andrea

[REDACTED]
Date: Friday, December 6, 2024 at 1:37 PM
To: Kepsel, Andrea <akepsel@msu.edu>
Subject: Re: Politics of Food Exhibit at the Main Library

Hi Andrea! I'm having trouble finding the exhibit. It's on the 3rd Floor or the Main Library, right?